The Job Market for New Economists: A Market Design Perspective

Abstract

This paper, written by the members of the American Economic Association (AEA) Ad Hoc Committee on the Job Market, provides an overview of the market for new Ph.D. economists. It describes the role of the AEA in the market and focuses in particular on two mechanisms adopted in recent years at the suggestion of our Committee. First, job market applicants now have a signaling service to send an expression of special interest to up to two employers prior to interviews at the January Allied Social Science Associations (ASSA) meetings. Second, the AEA now invites candidates who are still on the market, and employers whose positions are still vacant, to participate in a web-based "scramble" to reduce search costs and thicken the late part of the job market. We present statistics on the activity in these market mechanisms and present survey evidence that both mechanisms have facilitated matches. The paper concludes by discussing the emergence of platforms for transmitting job market information and other design issues that may arise in the market for new economists.

News about EDIRC, the index of economics institutions
November 21, 2012

EDIRC is an index of economics departments, institutes and research centers created in 1995 that has been feeding RePEc with data about such institutions. But beyond just a listing of institutions, it has evolved into an information source of its own right. Currently, it has the following additional features:

- o Links to journals or working paper series published by the respective institutions and indexed in RePEc.
- o Listings of all people affiliated with the respective institutions and registered with the RePEc Author Service.
- o For these people, a link to a compilation of all their publications.
- o A recent add-on is a listing of all alumni (final degree) as found on the RePEc Genealogy.
- o For the alumni as well, a link to a compilation of their publications.

With close to 13,000 listed institutions, EDIRC has grown a lot since its start. After all those years, the database will now go through some gradual changes, among which are:

- o New categories: the current ones were designed when there were only a few hundred listed institutions.
- o About 12% of the links are known to be invalid. They are currently being systematically checked for better addresses, but this will take several months.
- o Institutions that are known to be defunct and that have no links to

ABOUT THIS BLOG

Welcome to the RePEc blog. We, the RePEc team, discuss here the workings of RePEc and seek input from the community on how we can improve. We also want to give more volunteers opportunity to be part of the project and provide valuable services to the profession. Finally, we also discuss issues about the dissemination of research in Economics.

Abstract

This paper, written by the members of the American Economic Association (AEA) Ad Hoc Committee on the Job Market, provides an overview of the market for new Ph.D. economists. It describes the role of the AEA in the market and focuses in particular on two mechanisms adopted in recent years at the suggestion of our Committee. First, job market applicants now have a signaling service to send an expression of special interest to up to two employers prior to interviews at the January Allied Social Science Associations (ASSA) meetings. Second, the AEA now invites candidates who are still on the market, and employers whose positions are still vacant, to participate in a web-based "scramble" to reduce search costs and thicken the late part of the job market. We present statistics on the activity in these market mechanisms and present survey evidence that both mechanisms have facilitated matches. The paper concludes by discussing the emergence of platforms for transmitting job market information and other design issues that may arise in the market for new economists.

News about EDIRC, the index of economics institutions
November 21, 2012

EDIRC is an index of economics departments, institutes and research centers created in 1995 that has been feeding RePEc with data about such institutions. But beyond just a listing of institutions, it has evolved into an information source of its own right. Currently, it has the following additional features:

- o Links to journals or working paper series published by the respective institutions and indexed in RePEc.
- o Listings of all people affiliated with the respective institutions and registered with the RePEc Author Service.
- o For these people, a link to a compilation of all their publications.
- o A recent add-on is a listing of all alumni (final degree) as found on the RePEc Genealogy.
- o For the alumni as well, a link to a compilation of their publications.

With close to 13,000 listed institutions, EDIRC has grown a lot since its start. After all those years, the database will now go through some gradual changes, among which are:

- o New categories: the current ones were designed when there were only a few hundred listed institutions.
- o About 12% of the links are known to be invalid. They are currently being systematically checked for better addresses, but this will take several months.
- o Institutions that are known to be defunct and that have no links to

ABOUT THIS BLOG

Welcome to the RePEc blog. We, the RePEc team, discuss here the workings of the project, seek input from the community on how we can improve it, and want to give more visibility to the opportunity to be part of the project and provide valuable services to the profession. Finally, we also discuss issues about the dissemination of research in Economics.
